Program for the gifted LD student. Brown's New Curriculum provides much freedom and also encourages many risks. Students are required to structure their own programs, they are encouraged to explore unfamiliar areas, and they are asked to develop talents and practice skills never tried before. The Student Support Program (SSP) which comprises the tutoring program, the study skills program, the third world transition program, and the program for dyslexic students helps students meet these challenges so they may experience the full benefits of their freedom. DYSLEXIA: Brown was one of the first private universities to offer specific diagnostic and advising services for students who have dyslexia.
